Daniel J. Teske
Juneau Area Management Biologist

JUSTIFICATION

The decline in commercial shrimp fishery catch per unit of effort (CPUE) in the Juneau area section 11-A indicates low abundance levels. Due to this decline in CPUE the commercial fishery will remain closed until 2016. Creel census data from 2003-2007 shows the personal use and sport fishery harvest equal to the commercial harvest. Closure of the commercial, personal use and sport fisheries is necessary to rebuild stocks. Tagging studies have shown spot shrimp (the primary target species in all shrimp fisheries in the area) are relatively long lived and move little as adults, rendering them vulnerable to localized depletion. As protandric hermaphrodites, all spot shrimp begin life as males and convert to females after several years. Shrimp fishermen tend to target larger, predominantly female shrimp and fishery impacts are greatest to the most reproductively significant segment of the population.
