JUSTIFICATION: Unuk River king salmon, like other Southeast Alaska king salmon stocks, are experiencing a period of low productivity. The Unuk River king salmon escapement goal is 1,800–3,800 fish. In 2012 and 2013, after attaining its escapement goal for 35 consecutive years, the Unuk River king salmon stock failed to achieve the goal. That trend is expected to continue for the 2014 season. The 2014 pre-season forecast is for a total run of approximately 2,600 king salmon. Given recent fishery and harvest trends, a run of that size is not expected to provide for the escapement goal without pre-season fishery restrictions.

Unuk River king salmon are caught in the sport fishery throughout the marine waters of Southeast Alaska. Unuk River king salmon are coded wire tagged as smolt and recaptured as adults in marine fisheries. From 1982-2013, 67% of the total Unuk River recoveries in the Ketchikan sport fishery were caught in the following three statistical areas: 101-90 (west Behm Canal), 101-80 (north Behm Canal) and 101-45. Based on tag recoveries in the marine sport fishery, the peak sport harvest of Unuk River king salmon in these areas occurs from May 25 – June 28.

Since the 2014 forecast is not expected to provide for the escapement goal given fishery and harvest trends similar to recent years, the actions implemented in this emergency order are necessary to reduce the harvest of Unuk River king salmon in an effort to ensure the escapement goal is achieved. Similar actions are also planned for the commercial troll fishery.
