JUSTIFICATION:

King salmon stocks throughout western Alaska are experiencing a period of low productivity and, since at least 2010, below average run strength. The 2014 preseason forecast indicates that the Yukon River king salmon run in 2014 will be very weak, with no or very little harvestable surplus available. In 5 of the past 7 years the interim management escapement goal for king salmon into Canada was not attained. In 2009 and 2011 the interim escapement goal was attained as a result of very conservative management including reductions in subsistence fishing time in the mainstem Yukon River, no commercial fishery directed at king salmon, and sport fishery restrictions and closures. To conserve king salmon bound for Canada and to account for uncertainty in the preseason run forecast, the Alaska

Board of Fisheries modified the Yukon River King Salmon Management Plan in January 2013. With this modification (5 AAC 05.360 (j)) the department shall not open any subsistence fishing periods in districts 1 and 2 during the first pulse of the king salmon migration.

Under the 2014 preseason management strategy, the subsistence fishery for king salmon will close with the first arrival of king salmon in the coastal districts. This closure will be implemented chronologically in each district with the upriver migration of king salmon. No directed commercial fishery for king salmon or sale of king salmon caught incidentally in other commercial fisheries will be permitted. King salmon incidentally captured in the commercial or subsistence fishery may not be retained. The anticipated low abundance of king salmon into the Yukon River, the recent failures to reach Canadian border passage goals and escapement targets in Alaska, and restrictions placed on the subsistence fishery, warrant a closure of sport fishing for king salmon in the Yukon River drainage.
