The presentation will include a general discussion about sea ducks; their biology and status within North America and in Alaska, threats, and management concerns. The Sea Duck Joint Venture was established in 1998 to address concerns about sea duck population declines and support the development of knowledge and understanding of all 15 species of Mergini that occur in North America. A general overview of the Sea Duck Joint Venture will include its history, structure, and goals, what it has accomplished to date, future direction, and how to get involved.
