JUSTIFICATION:

King salmon stocks throughout western Alaska continue to experience a period of low productivity and, since at least 2010, below average run strength. The 2019 preseason outlook indicates that the Yukon River king salmon run in 2019 will be below average, with very little harvestable surplus available. In the past 11 years the interim management escapement goal for king salmon passage into Canada has not been attained or has only been attained due to extremely conservative management, including subsistence fishing closures or severe restrictions to subsistence fishing opportunity, complete closure of directed commercial fishing and no sale of king salmon caught during chum salmon commercial fishing periods, and sport fishery closures.

Under the 2019 preseason management strategy, the subsistence fishery for king salmon is likely to be restricted with the first arrival of king salmon in District 1. Restrictions may be implemented chronologically in each district with the upriver migration of king salmon. No sale of incidentally-caught king salmon in the directed commercial chum salmon fishery will be permitted until run strength is indicated to be at the upper end of the forecast. The use of selective fishing gear (dip nets, beach seines, and closely attended fish wheels) will be required during the early commercial summer chum salmon fishery openings that occur; king salmon caught incidentally during these periods must be released immediately to the water alive. The anticipated below average abundance of king salmon into the Yukon River, and restrictions placed on the subsistence fishery, warrant a closure of sport fishing for king salmon in the Yukon River drainage. If inseason stock assessment information indicates that run strength will be at the upper end of the forecast, and a majority of the king salmon escapement goals and subsistence needs in the Yukon River drainage will be met, restrictions will be relaxed.
