JUSTIFICATION:

Pelagic rockfish harvest in the Sitka Area has gradually increased from 20,000 fish in 2009 to over 70,000 fish in 2022 despite restrictions during 2016 and 2018 designed to reduce harvest. Although there is limited stock information, analysis of the length composition of the sport harvest shows a slight, but gradual decline in average weight since 2006 indicating a possible change in the population structure. This may be a result of high harvest. A reduction in bag limit from three to two pelagic rockfish for nonresidents and a reduction from five fish to four fish for residents is predicted to reduce harvest to a level similar to that seen in 2011 through 2013. This action is being taken in the interest of conservative management until better stock information is available.
